

Prof. Ernest Cachia
Head, Department of Computer Information Systems,
Faculty of ICT,
University of Malta.

19th February 2024

To whom it may concern

Reference for Mr Timothy Zammit (ID: 0112103L)

I am writing this reference letter for Mr Timothy Zammit, who was my undergraduate student at the University of Malta, where he was reading for his Bachelor's Degree [B.Sc. IT (Hons)] in Software Development, for employment positions related to UI design and project planning. I have known Timothy for a period of over two years, both as his lecturer and as his supervisor for his Group Assigned Practical Task in his second year of study. During his time under my tutelage, Timothy exhibited a very good blend of creativity, analytical prowess, and a keen eye for detail – qualities that are indispensable in the dynamic field of UI design.

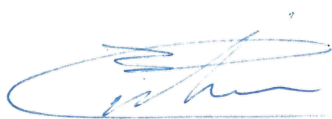

Timothy's passion for aesthetics and functionality were evident in his projects, where he seamlessly merged innovative design with user-centric principles. His work not only adhered to high standards of visual appeal but also demonstrated a profound understanding of user engagement and experience. His proficiency in design tools and technologies, coupled with his ability to grasp complex concepts quickly, made his contributions invaluable to class projects and collaborative endeavours.

Beyond his technical skills, Timothy's foresight and ability to plan effectively set him apart. He displayed a natural flair for breaking down large projects into manageable tasks, setting realistic timelines, and leading his peers with a blend of empathy and determination. This innate talent for project management, combined with his design skills, suggests a promising trajectory towards more strategic and managerial roles in the future.

Timothy's interpersonal skills and professionalism make him well-suited for roles that require client interaction and business relations. He possesses a unique ability to translate complex design concepts into understandable terms for non-technical stakeholders, facilitating clear and productive discussions. His respectful and considerate approach, combined with his problem-solving abilities, ensures that he is as comfortable in client meetings as he is in design sessions.

I am confident that Timothy will bring a fresh perspective and sense of dedication to any team or project he joins.

Sincerely,

Ernest Cachia.